Background

International Council of Aircraft Owner and Pilot Association (IAOPA) is a non-profit federation of 73 non-governmental, non-profit national general aviation organizations with more than 470,000 pilots in total. The first IAOPA World Assembly was held in 1965, and since then it has been successfully held 26 times.

IAOPA World Assembly is a communication platform for international general aviation, bringing together top business leaders, entrepreneurs, social elites, experts and scholars. Set to “promote international general aviation”, the event seeks to develop general aviation from a global perspective.

China is hosting the 27th IAOPA World Assembly, which is an opportunity to demonstrate China's general aviation industry and introduce advanced products, service and experience in management. It is a highly specialized international platform for aviation companies, owners and pilots to have constructive dialogue.

Background

Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association of China (AOPA-China) is approved by the State Council and registered by the Ministry of Civil Affairs in 2004, under the supervision of Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC). AOPA-China is a not-for-profit national general aviation organization, and is a member country of International Council of Aircraft Owner and Pilot Associations (IAOPA) and is the sole legitimate representative (including TaiWan and HongKong) of the IAOPA in China. AOPA-China represents the interests and rights of the aircraft owners and pilots in China, and accepts the guidance and regulations from IAOPA.

The annual China Low-altitude Economy Summit is the most influential communication platform in low-altitude economic sector in China. It has been successfully held three times before and has brought together military and government representatives, experts and scholars, entrepreneurs and social elites, to discuss plans for China's general aviation development, which has contributed actively to China's low-altitude economic development

The 4th China Low-altitude Economy Summit will be held at the same period as the World Assembly, during which time leading figures in general aviation sector in China and specialists in aviation industry in the world will gather in Beijing to communicate and share valuable experience, aiming to push forward the opening of low-altitude in China and the development of global general aviation.
